Libby, Charles E. Morrison, Frank A. Perkins : Fall term : Minnie Biedermann, Lotta S. Kingman, Albert Libby, Frank A. Perkins, Chesley Perkins ; Winter term : Albert Libby.

The spring term was a success, under the administration of Miss Anna R. Lang, whose qualifications as a teacher were demonstrated. The maintenance of good discipline, and the marked improvement of the scholars in a closer application to their studies and in general deportment continued during the entire term.

Miss Susie F. McDonald, who was engaged as teacher for the fall term proved to be an able and conscientious instructress. Miss McDonald's management of the school gave satisfaction to the committee and to all interested in the school.

Miss Susie F. McDonald and Miss Anna R. Lang taught the school during the winter term, and gave the same general satisfaction in their management as during the spring and fall terms.

Roll of Perfect Attendance.—Spring term: Harold H. Hayes, Sumner A. Haley, Winfield H. Twombly, Fred C. Twombly, Vina H. Twombly; Fall term: Winfield H. Twombly, Fred C. Twombly, Vina H. Twombly; Winter term: Samuel Hale, Minnie C. Hayes, Vina H. Twombly, Fred C. Twombly, Winfield H. Twombly.

Miss Georgia E. Twombly has taught the full school year. The parents take a deep interest and visit the school at least once a term. The children love and respect their teacher, and she, in turn, evidences commendable pride in the character and condition of her school. Unity proves a success.

REMARKS.

Teachers of experience know that if they excite a deep and profitable interest in their school they must teach many things besides book studies. In our common schools there will always be a company of small children who, not yet having learned to read understandingly, will have no means of interesting themselves and must depend mainly upon the teacher for the interest they may take in the school. This to them seems the most critical period of their lives. Whatever impression is now made upon them will be enduring. If there they become disgusted with the dullness and confinement of school and associate the idea of pain and repulsiveness with that of learning, who can blame the child for not wanting to go to school.

If on the other hand the teacher is skillful and excites in them a spirit of inquiry, and leads them in suitable ways to observe, to think and to feel that the schoolroom is a happy place for children, one point is gained. I think it would be for the interest of the scholars if the teachers set apart a few minutes once a day for a general exercise in the schools, when it should be required of all to lay aside their studies, assume an erect position and give their undivided attention to whatever the teacher may bring before them. The teacher should previously select such topics, and make such changes in the exercises as will interest, enlighten and excite the minds of all. By doing this the children learn many things which would take them a long time to learn from books. It will cause them to make inquiry of their parents. This can be fully illustrated from our every day lives; topics are brought up and discussed; we inquire, we learn.
